Californian encephalitis virus. It was first discovered in 1943 in California, USA. The virus damages nerve cells, causing encephalitis (brain inflammation), and is transmitted to humans by mosquitos. In humans, the virus damages nerve cells, causing encephalitis (brain inflammation), stiff neck, lethargy and seizures. It was first discovered in 1943 in California, USA.