et al. page 505).

(see Southwell TG, accompanying sequences (not shown).

or thoracic cord involvement shown on columns. There was no enhancement the signal change localised to the dorsal hyperintensity. (C) Axial T2 image shows posterior, longitudinally distributed T2 the upper to mid cervical cord with T2 image) showing mild expansion of (B) MR scan of cervical spine (sagittal purposes. 40 cm ruler included for scale. purchased online by authors for illustrative consumed by this patient over 72 hours), nitrous oxide canisters (the quantity Cover image: Figure 1 (A) Depicts 200 nitrous oxide canisters (the quantity under

This article has been made freely available online to 1 December 2022. Downloaded from http://pn.bmj.com/ Pract Neurol: first published as on 1 December 2022. Protected by copyright.http://pn.bmj.com/ Pract Neurol: first published as on 1 December 2022. Protected by copyright.
What neurologists need to understand outside their own speciality

528 Tumour-induced osteomalacia: a rare cause of chronic pain and weakness
J T Nasr, J Tohme, M T Collins, M T Drake, I R Hartley, J Sfeir, K Dockery, M Taskin

532 Diabetes mellitus: what the neurologists need to know
J W Stephens, D M Williams, R Chudleigh

Book club

540 The Sleeping Beauties
J Mock, P Suszczynska, T A T Hughes

Carphology

541 Carphology
A F Ben

ABN News

542 ABN news
A Wright-Parkes